Geographic Distribution

The screening retained 34 Food Sharing Initiatives, and the submitted coordinates show a dispersed urban network with the strongest inferred concentrations in northern, northeastern and inner-city Milan. The north and northeast include Coltivando at the Politecnico di Milano Bovisa campus, Eufemia in Affori, Mutuo Soccorso Milano on Via Edolo, Refettorio Ambrosiano in Greco and several food-aid or meal services around Città Studi and Lambrate. Lambrate is represented by the Via Bassini surplus-recovery hub and Ronda Carità's Sunday lunch serving the Casoretto-Lambrate area, while the Turro parish food distribution adds another northeastern node. To the west and northwest, Fondazione Arché's Humus is based on Via Lessona in Quarto Oggiaro and distributes through networks in Municipio 8 and Municipio 7, Orto in Cotica operates at Cascina Cotica on Via Natta, and Ristorante Solidale Ruben is on Via Gonin. The south and southeast include Nocetum on Via San Dionigi, the CIQ Giardino delle Meraviglie on Via Fabio Massimo and the Foody Zero Sprechi hub inside Milan's wholesale-market system.

Coordinate map based only on the latitude and longitude values supplied in the CSV. Labels are original CSV row numbers; three retained rows lack complete latitude values and are not plotted.

Central and inner-city provision includes Fratelli di San Francesco, Opera San Francesco in Corso Concordia, Robin Food in Via Borgogna, the San Vincenzo group at San Lorenzo in Corso di Porta Ticinese and Solidando. Several retained initiatives are intentionally multi-site rather than single-point services: Pane Quotidiano operates in Viale Toscana and Viale Monza, Food for Life describes two Milan service points, and RECUP lists numerous street markets together with Sogemi. Three retained rows lack complete latitude values in the submitted CSV, so the coordinate map plots 31 of the 34 retained initiatives and does not replace missing coordinates with guessed locations. The district bar chart uses page-stated neighbourhoods together with the supplied coordinates to form analytical area groups, rather than presenting those groups as official municipal boundaries.

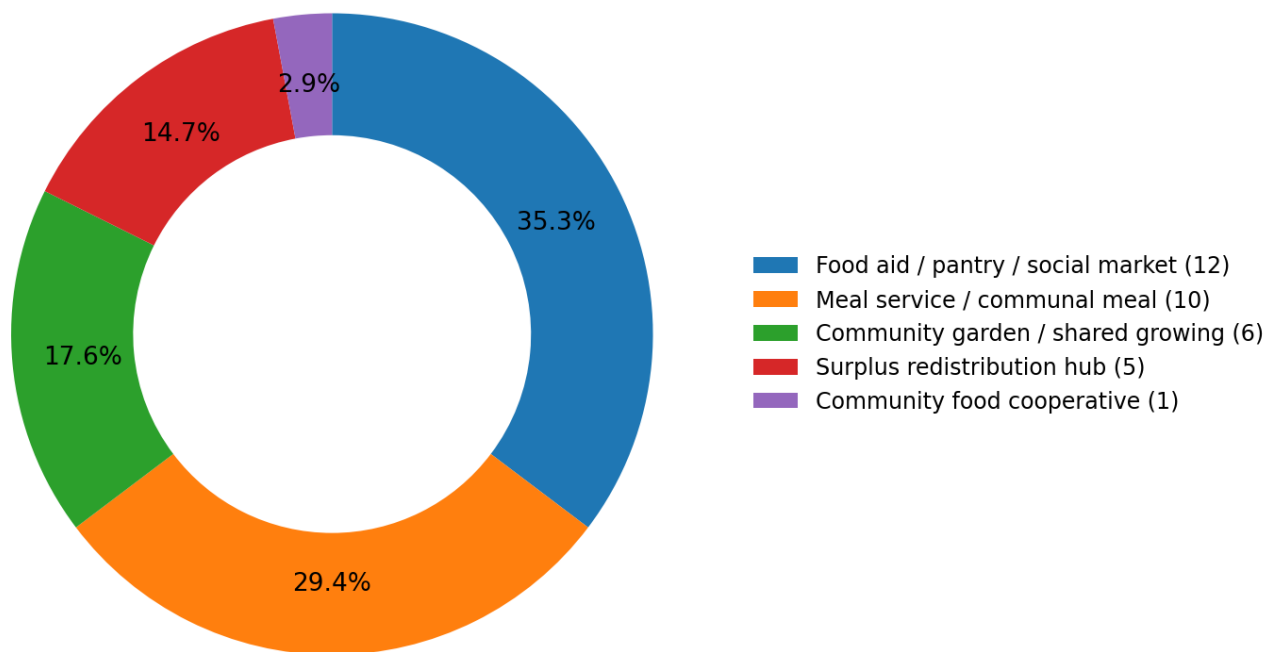

Counts by inferred neighbourhood/district grouping derived from page-stated locations and submitted coordinates; these are analytical groupings rather than official administrative boundaries.

Types of Food Sharing Initiatives

The 34 retained pages fall into five primary FSI types based on the activity most directly documented by each visited page. Food aid, pantry and social-market provision is the largest category with 12 initiatives, representing 35.3% of the retained set. This category includes COOPI's Milan poverty-response project, parish Caritas distributions, Pane Quotidiano, Progetto Arca, Robin Food, SOS Milano and Solidando. Prepared-meal and communal-meal services account for 10 initiatives, or 29.4%, including Cena dell'Amicizia, Food for Life, Le Suore della Mensa, Opera Cardinal Ferrari, Opera San Francesco, Refettorio Ambrosiano and Ruben. Community gardens and shared-growing initiatives account for six retained entries, or 17.6%, with examples including Coltivando, Giardino Lea Garofalo, Giardino delle Meraviglie, Orto Pedagogico Resistente and Orto in Cotica.

Retained FSI types (n=34)

Primary FSI type assigned from the activity documented on each retained page; percentages use the 34 retained URLs as the denominator.

Five initiatives, or 14.7%, are classified primarily as surplus-redistribution hubs or networks: Food Hub Cuccagna, the Via Bassini hub, Humus, Foody Zero Sprechi and RECUP. Eufemia forms the single community-food-cooperative category, representing 2.9% of retained pages, because its site combines a collectively managed community emporium with a social bistro and short-chain food distribution. Several initiatives have hybrid functions, particularly Nocetum, which combines social agriculture with food redistribution, and Refettorio Ambrosiano, which combines a meal service with surplus recovery. The donut percentages are calculated only from the retained pages and are rounded to one decimal place, so they describe the screened sample rather than the entire Milan food-support sector.

Operational and Funding Models

The retained sample is dominated by NGO-led activity, while a smaller group is primarily council-supported or community-led and none of the retained initiatives is classified as primarily commercial. Religious and secular nonprofit operators are prominent in direct food provision, including Opera San Francesco, Le Suore della Mensa, Fratelli di San Francesco, Progetto Arca, Robin Food and the parish-based Caritas and San Vincenzo services. Public support nevertheless enters several NGO-led models: Fratelli di San Francesco reports food assistance connected to Banco Alimentare and European FSE+ resources, while Sant'Angela Merici documents food parcels distributed through the PN Inclusione and Banco Alimentare Lombardia framework. Humus is operated by Fondazione Arché but describes support from the Food Policy area of the Comune di Milano and partnerships with Banco Alimentare and COOP Lombardia, making it a council-supported

NGO partnership rather than a stand-alone municipal service. Food Hub Cuccagna similarly combines Comune di Milano Food Policy support with civil-society organizations including Cascina Cuccagna, ACRA, Emergency, RECUP, EStà and Il Gabbiano.

The Via Bassini hub is managed by Banco Alimentare Lombardia within a network involving the Comune di Milano, Politecnico di Milano and other partners, and the BCC Milano page records a 60,000-euro contribution to the initiative. Community-led governance is clearest in Coltivando, Eufemia, Mutuo Soccorso Milano, Orto Pedagogico Resistente and Orto in Cotica, where participation by residents, members or volunteers is part of the operating structure described online. Giardino Lea Garofalo is community-managed through an agreement with the Comune di Milano, while the CIQ garden was supported through the OpenAgri framework and the European Urban Innovative Actions programme. These primary labels describe who leads day-to-day provision; they do not imply that initiatives rely on a single funding stream, because donations, volunteers, public programmes, food-bank supply and corporate partnerships frequently overlap.

Reach and Activity

Reach varies sharply across the retained initiatives because some pages publish daily service volumes while others describe participation or schedules without reporting beneficiary totals. Opera Cardinal Ferrari reported for 2024 a total of 65,275 lunches, 38,250 breakfasts and 2,801 food parcels, alongside an average of about 220 people per day using its centre for meals or support. Opera San Francesco's official material reports that its two canteens serve an average of about 2,800 meals per day, placing it among the highest-volume meal providers identified in the screening. Pane Quotidiano states that its two Milan distribution sites provide free essential food every day to more than 3,500 people, while Le Suore della Mensa describes more than 500 hot meals served daily at its Via Ponzio service. At a smaller but regular scale, Food for Life's Milan page describes approximately 60 free vegetarian meals every Tuesday evening across its Milan service activity.

Humus reports 2,870 collected and distributed packages weighing 15,524 kilograms and says that, in the first half of 2023, Food Policy support enabled food shopping assistance for about 200 family households. RECUP reports 436 tonnes of food recovered and 50,000 people reached in a year across its combined Rome-and-Milan network, while separately listing the Milan markets and Sogemi timetable where recovery takes place. Refettorio Ambrosiano reports more than 220,000 free meals from 2015 to 2025 produced through the recovery of 40 tonnes of food, together with 90 volunteers per year and more than 14,000 lunches for older residents of the Greco neighbourhood. Where retained pages such as community gardens publish opening patterns, volunteer arrangements or recurring exchanges but no attendance count, the report treats those signals as evidence of regular activity without converting them into unsupported popularity figures.

Digital Presence and Accessibility

Digital accessibility varied substantially across the 163 candidate URLs, and 39 entries were discarded because the submitted page could not be read during screening. A further 20 candidates were discarded as directory or policy pages because they described networks, programmes or background material without documenting a specific Milan FSI at that URL. The retained set includes sites with very current digital signals: RECUP's homepage lists Milan market times and links blog updates dated through July 2026, while Progetto Arca's homepage includes current service and campaign material. Several smaller initiatives also publish practical access information, including Orto in Cotica's regular Wednesday and Sunday openings and Sant'Angela Merici's appointment-based Caritas access and food-parcel schedule. Humus provides unusually detailed operational documentation online, including its Via Lessona location, beneficiary networks, collection partnerships and the explicit statement that the distribution space itself is not open to the public.

Refettorio Ambrosiano presents its meal service and surplus-recovery functions on a dedicated site and publishes cumulative service data through 2025, making both function and activity level readily verifiable. In contrast, Facebook-only candidates and sites blocked by access controls were not inferred to be active simply because an organization name or coordinate was available in the CSV. Eight accessible candidates were screened out as ended or historical activities, and five further rows were removed as duplicates of another submitted initiative page. The resulting digital-access pattern means the report distinguishes absence of verifiable page evidence from absence of real-world activity, using 'inaccessible' as a screening decision rather than as a claim that an organization has ceased operating.

Notable Initiatives

Food Hub Cuccagna is notable for combining surplus recovery with direct neighbourhood distribution and for describing approximately 350 beneficiary families within a partnership linked to the Comune di Milano Food Policy. The Via Bassini hub represents an earlier neighbourhood-hub model in Lambrate, where Banco Alimentare Lombardia coordinates recovered food and redistribution through local charitable organizations. Humus stands out for tracing food from recurring Banco Alimentare and COOP Lombardia collections to neighbourhood committees and family networks across Municipio 8 and Municipio 7, while publishing both kilograms and household reach. RECUP is distinctive because redistribution occurs directly in markets: its current site lists multiple Milan street markets and four weekly mornings at Sogemi, alongside network-wide annual recovery and reach figures. Refettorio Ambrosiano combines recovered ingredients with a free meal service in Greco and documents a decade-long 2015-2025 record of more than 220,000 meals and 40 tonnes of recovered food.

Opera Cardinal Ferrari and Opera San Francesco are notable for the scale and regularity of prepared-meal provision documented by their official materials, with daily or annual service volumes far above those published by most smaller initiatives in the sample. Coltivando and Orto in Cotica illustrate a different sharing model in which food is connected to collective cultivation, participation and recurring community access rather than emergency distribution alone. Eufemia adds a cooperative model in Affori, with a community emporium, social bistro and member-managed selection and distribution of agro-ecological short-chain food. Pane Quotidiano, the parish Caritas services, Robin Food, SOS Milano and Solidando demonstrate that the screened Milan ecosystem also depends on routine food access delivered through volunteer and nonprofit networks rather than only through dedicated anti-waste hubs.
